Your personal wellbeing report

Sarah Mitchell · Technology team · Vantara Group

June 2026 · Covers Jan - Jun 2026

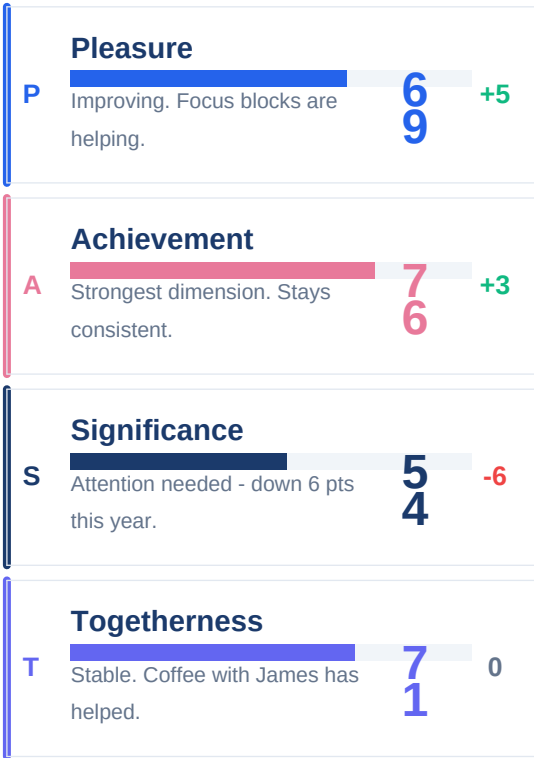

This is your personal report. It belongs to you. Nothing in it is shared with Vantara Group - only anonymised group scores ever leave Wellfounded. Use this to track what's working and what to focus on next.

Your scores at a glance

Your overall score is 68 - a solid position, and up from 63 six months ago. Achievement is your strongest dimension and has stayed strong all year. The main area to focus on is Significance - your sense of meaning at work has dipped, and it's the dimension where small, deliberate actions make the most difference.

YOUR PAST SCORES

vs column shows change from Jan 2026. Scores out of 100.

Month by month

	Jan	Feb	Mar	Apr	May	Jun
P · Pleasure	64	65	66	68	70	69
A · Achievement	73	74	74	75	76	76
S · Significance	60	58	57	55	56	54
T · Togetherness	71	70	71	72	71	71

■ Significance has declined every month since January. This is the priority dimension for the next quarter.

Things you tried - and what you said about them

Based on recommendations you marked as done and your follow-up responses.

Protect one focus block per day

Pleasure · "Yes, much better" · "Yes, every day"

This is having a measurable effect. Your Pleasure score improved by 5 points since you started this habit in March. Keep it going.

Coffee with James (meaningful work friendship)

Togetherness · "Yes, genuinely" · "Yes, already thinking of someone else"

A small investment with a clear return. Your Togetherness score has stayed stable despite hybrid pressure, partly because of this.

Map your impact - write down 3 ways your work helps people

Significance · "A little" · "Maybe occasionally"

Helpful but not yet a habit. Your Significance score is still declining - this exercise needs to become more regular.

Purpose conversation with your manager

Significance · Not yet tried

This is still pending. Given your Significance scores, this is the highest priority action for the next month.

Moments worth remembering

Selected entries from your PAST journal where you noted something meaningful.

■	Grea P76 A82 S62 Mon 2 Jun T78 "Good kick-off session. Felt like the work actually matters. Stayed in flow for 90 minutes on the data model." → This was a high-Significance day - notice what made it feel meaningful.
■	Goo P72 A88 S68 Thu 29 May T66 "Finished the report. Real sense of completion. Good feedback from the team. Felt proud." → Achievement days like this anchor your sense of progress. What made it possible?
■	OK P58 A54 S38 Fri 30 May T52 "End of week drag. Unclear what I achieved. Felt a bit lonely. Lots of meetings, not much to show." → Low Significance and Togetherness together - worth noticing when these drop at the same time.
■	Dec P62 A68 S48 Tue 3 Jun T64 "Lots of meetings. Not much to show for it. Called Mum on the commute which helped." → The call improved your Togetherness score. Small connections matter on hard days.

Your focus for the next 3 months

1 Have the purpose conversation with your manager

This is the one action you haven't tried yet that research suggests will have the biggest impact on Significance. Book it before the end of June.

2 Continue the daily focus block - and protect it

It's working. The risk is that it gets eroded by meetings. Be explicit about it in your calendar and treat it as non-negotiable.

3 Do the impact mapping exercise weekly, not just once

You said it helped a little. The research shows frequency matters - a brief weekly reflection ("who did my work help this week?") has more effect than a one-off exercise.

4 Deliberately reach out to one more colleague

You identified James as a meaningful connection. The next step is one more - a different person, a different kind of conversation.
